FROM OUR RECTOR

Dear Parishioners,

Today's gospel is a continuation of the instructions that Jesus gave to the twelve apostles as he sent them out to go and proclaim the Good News of the Kingdom of God. The values of the Kingdom are different from the values of the world, so much so that people tend to reject the message and turn against the messengers. Tradition has it that almost all the apostles died the violent death of martyrdom.

Some of them ended up being crucified on the cross, like Peter and Andrew; beheaded, like James and Paul; flayed alive, like Bartholomew; or thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil, like John. It was natural, therefore, for the apostles to fear as Jesus sent them out to evangelize a hostile world. Yielding this fear would make them abandon the dangerous mission to save their skin. So Jesus instructs them in today's gospel on how to overcome this crippling fear. The key is to look unto Jesus as their hero and model. As Jesus said earlier in this discourse, "A disciple is not above the teacher, nor a slave above the master" (Matthew 10:24).

The gospel identifies two fears that the apostles had: fear of false accusation and conviction, and fear of bodily harm and death. In either case Jesus teaches them that the way to overcome the fear is by keeping one's mind focused not on the here-and-now but on the coming kingdom of God. "So have no fear of them; for nothing is covered up that will not be uncovered, and nothing secret that will not become known" (verse 26).

ARCHBISHOP'S COLUMN

The Consequences of Turning Toward or Away from the Lord

Biblical history offers enduring lessons about faith, sin and God's providence

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ,

History whispers to us of God's purposes for humankind.

I'm thinking about history because the readings for this week walk us through some key events in the history of ancient Israel — events in which the purposes of God for His people were clearly discernible.

In 2 Kings 17, we read of the fall of the northern tribes to Assyria in a series of events which happened in the mid-700s BC. As the writer of 2 Kings tells us: "This came about because the children of Israel sinned against the LORD." The prophets told the people in words; now God was telling them in their history: sin has consequences. (As one Biblical commentator put it: "God writes with history the way men and women write with words.")

In 2 Kings 24 and 25, we read about the first and second waves of the Babylonian Exile, in a series of events which unfolded in 597 and 587 BC. Again, the writer of 2 Kings makes the reason for these events clear: "(The king) did evil in the sight of the LORD, just as his forebears had done."

In between those events, the same Assyrian army that had destroyed the northern tribes in the mid-700s marched against Jerusalem and the southern tribes around 701 BC. Upon receiving a threatening letter from Sennacherib of Assyria, King Hezekiah brings it straight to the temple of the Lord to pray and ask for God's help. And as a result, the Lord saved Jerusalem in dramatic fashion. The writer of 2 Kings doesn't belabor the point, but the message is clear: When you turn to the Lord, you receive His blessing; when you turn from the Lord, you bring about your own destruction.

ARCHBISHOP MITCHELL ROZANSKI

SERVE THE LORD WITH GLADNESS

It's interesting that the patterns which were so clearly exemplified in the history of ancient Israel are also echoed in our own personal histories. This is part of what we see when we study the great spiritual writers like St. Ignatius of Loyola, St. Francis de Sales and St. Teresa of Avila. Let's be careful! The patterns of the spiritual life are only echoes of those historical patterns and need discernment. Still, it makes sense: The same God who was at work in biblical history is also at work in our own lives. Turning toward or away from the Lord has an effect on us.

Contemporary history continues to whisper to us of God's purposes. Here, too, let's be careful: they are only whispers. Anyone who claims to know exactly how history will unfold is fooling themselves and trying to fool others. Still, the same God who was at work in biblical history, and is at work in our own lives, is also at work in the world. So we can know, just as surely as the writer of 2 Kings knew, that turning from the Lord and turning to the Lord both have consequences for the history of a nation.

As we look back on the history of America, I think there are lessons to be learned about the ways we have turned toward or away from God in our "experiment in ordered liberty." There have been consequences! So, as we look around at the issues of our own time, we can be just as sure that there will be consequences of turning toward or away from the Lord. History will continue to whisper to us of God's purposes.
